

"We may, if, we choose, sneer at snob-bery and scoff at social strugglera," writes Elizabeth Bisland in the Ladies' Home Journal, "but when a man is ambittoms or a woman is proud he or she desires to secure for himself or herself, and for their children, the privilege of being received as an equal everywhere. And however much one may rail, the fact remains that wealth one may rail, the fact remains that wealth and fashion do set, and have always set, the standard in social life, and that if one wishes a free admission everywhere one must conform one's self to that standard.

Four Hundred are no more cultured, ectual, wealthy or witty than many The Four Hundred are no more cardines, intellectual, wealthy or witty than many whom they refuse to admit to association with them in their pleasures, and these resentful folk demand in bitter amazement why anyone admits their pretensions, or struggles for their recognition. The answer is not far to seek. A man may have all the trellectual attributes, and yet not be of is not far to seek. A man may have and yet not be of sufficient importance to be admitted to the sufficient importance to be admitted to the orchestra of society, and the musicians may orchestra of society, and the musicians may and Mrs. Gus O. a notable housewife, famed for her hospitalities.

The list might be continued indefinitely, and each day some new work discovered by young women who make for themselves a place in the world, instead of accepting any nook available. A novel occupation has just been decided on by a Kansas City girl who came home last spring with college honors unusually thick upon her. She will become a connoisseur of fine china, and has entered upon her preparatory studies with enthusiasm. A genuine love of pottery and the fact that she has at her command a large collection of choice specimens of every kind caused her decision. She will make herself familiar with every detail of the art, and with its history, and will become an authority on the subject.

In a large Sunday school class of charmionable churches, an extremely interesting state, of affairs exists. The fair members are constantly in a gentle flutter of excitement, and will probably continue to be for some, time to come, for in that class there are eight brides and brides-to-be! Mr. Bigger was made president at the time, and at the meetings held during that year were heard some of the brightnest speeches and the most beautiful sentiments that have ever been recorded before a literary society. Manny of those who attended the society at that time will remember the articles on the "Ethics of the Drama," by Mr. Frank Hastings, of this city; the delightful articles read by Mrs. George, the poems read by Mrs. Hereford and Mr. White, and the bright repartee that distinguished the debates. Who can forget the second mock trial, when "Charlie" Rickert became the star witness and for half an hour kept the audience in convulsions through his witty replies to the brilliant sallies of "Judge" Griffith. One might say that this has been the history of the society each succeeding year, but at no time has the brilliancy of that period and the year following been quite equaled. Mr. I. W.
